

The dialogue

TEACHER: Jack, please tell us which story you preferred and why...

The dialogue

TEACHER: Jack, please tell us which story you preferred and why...

JACK: I preferred At the Zoo because it was very mysterious and you didn't find out what was looking at what until the very end because when I first heard the story I thought there were some new arriving animals and the children were looking at them for a school project but at the end I found that these aliens were actually looking at humans at the zoo and the humans were the new arrivals...

The dialogue

TEACHER: Jack, please tell us which story you preferred and why...

JACK: I preferred At the Zoo because it was very mysterious and you didn't find out what was looking at what until the very end because when I first heard the story I thought there were some new arriving animals and the children were looking at them for a school project but at the end I found that these aliens were actually looking at humans at the zoo and the humans were the new arrivals...

TEACHER: The story sounds very confusing. When did you understand that the children were in the cages?

The dialogue

TEACHER: Jack, please tell us which story you preferred and why...

JACK: I preferred At the Zoo because it was very mysterious and you didn't find out what was looking at what until the very end because when I first heard the story I thought there were some new arriving animals and the children were looking at them for a school project but at the end I found that these aliens were actually looking at humans at the zoo and the humans were the new arrivals...

TEACHER: The story sounds very confusing. When did you understand that the children were in the cages?

JACK: Oh, not until the very end. In fact, the first time I read it I didn't get it at all. It took two readings and then I thought, 'Now I know what's going on!'

The dialogue

TEACHER: Jack, please tell us which story you preferred and why...

JACK: I preferred At the Zoo because it was very mysterious and you didn't find out what was looking at what until the very end because when I first heard the story I thought there were some new arriving animals and the children were looking at them for a school project but at the end I found that these aliens were actually looking at humans at the zoo and the humans were the new arrivals...

TEACHER: The story sounds very confusing. When did you understand that the children were in the cages?

JACK: Oh, not until the very end. In fact, the first time I read it I didn't get it at all. It took two readings and then I thought, 'Now I know what's going on!'

TEACHER: But on our list of What makes a book worth reading that we wrote earlier, we put 'EASY TO READ'. At the Zoo doesn't sound like it was an easy story if you had to read it twice to understand it...

The dialogue

TEACHER: Jack, please tell us which story you preferred and why...

JACK: I preferred At the Zoo because it was very mysterious and you didn't find out what was looking at what until the very end because when I first heard the story I thought there were some new arriving animals and the children were looking at them for a school project but at the end I found that these aliens were actually looking at humans at the zoo and the humans were the new arrivals...

TEACHER: The story sounds very confusing. When did you understand that the children were in the cages?

JACK: Oh, not until the very end. In fact, the first time I read it I didn't get it at all. It took two readings and then I thought, 'Now I know what's going on!'

TEACHER: But on our list of What makes a book worth reading that we wrote earlier, we put 'EASY TO READ'. At the Zoo doesn't sound like it was an easy story if you had to read it twice to understand it...

JACK: Yes, but the words were easy. The story wasn't. The story was a mystery and I like mysteries, so that is why I like At the Zoo better

The dialogue

TEACHER: Jack, please tell us which story you preferred and why...

JACK: I preferred At the Zoo because it was very mysterious and you didn't find out what was looking at what until the very end because when I first heard the story I thought there were some new arriving animals and the children were looking at them for a school project but at the end I found that these aliens were actually looking at humans at the zoo and the humans were the new arrivals...

TEACHER: The story sounds very confusing. When did you understand that the children were in the cages?

JACK: Oh, not until the very end. In fact, the first time I read it I didn't get it at all. It took two readings and then I thought, 'Now I know what's going on!'

TEACHER: But on our list of What makes a book worth reading that we wrote earlier, we put 'EASY TO READ'. At the Zoo doesn't sound like it was an easy story if you had to read it twice to understand it...

JACK: Yes, but the words were easy. The story wasn't. The story was a mystery and I like mysteries, so that is why I like At the Zoo better

TEACHER: So Jack prefers At the Zoo. What about you, Karen?